WASHINGTON, 3; ST. LOUIS, 2. What happened in the eighth inning of yesterday's game was enough to bring smiles to the face of a hobbyhorse.

After drifting along in the ruck for the greater part of the distance, the Nationals closed with a rush in their last time at the bat, overcame a lead of two runs, and captured the deciding game of the ficient to win the game. Score: series from Jimmy McAleer's near-

Boston, July 15 .- Four of Detroit's hits to-day were for extra bases, and the resulting runs proved more than suf-series from Jimmy McAleer's near-champs.

For seven innings the Nationals stood a good chance of being shut out. Texas Bills Balley, the Browns' young left-hander, was in grand form, and up to the eighth round Washington had culled only three widely-separated singles. The youngster's control was excellent, and

In the eighth it happened. While the Nationals bunched four clean singles, Bailey tossed in a wild pitch, and before he succeeded in retiring the third man three Washingtonians had spiked the home plate and the game was won.
